Leone Takes Office in Italy, Rejects Cabinet Resignation

ROME, Dec. 29 (NYT).-Italy's for 17 months, seems unable to new president, Giovanni Leone, strossed national unity and lovalty to the Western alliance in his inaugural address today, and asked the government of Premier Emilio Colombo to stay in office.

Mr. Colombo, in a meeting with the head of state after the solemn inauguration ceremony. agreed to withdraw his and his ministers' resignation, which he had offered in keeping with constitutional practice.

However, members of the cabinet and of the parties that so far have backed it said that a full-fledged government crisis seemed mevitable within the next 10 weeks.

The center-left coalition ihat has governed Italy for the last few years had been strained to the breaking point during the 16-day presidential election, these politicians said, and the present government could not continue in power as though nothing had happened.

Spokesmen for Mr. Colombo said today that a "thorough

Mintoff Sought $11 Million More

British Will Quit Malta, Reject New Pay Demand

By Anthony Lewis

LONDON, Dec. 28 (NYT).— Britain announced today that it would withdraw all its forces from Malta and end its long military connection with Mediterranean Island.

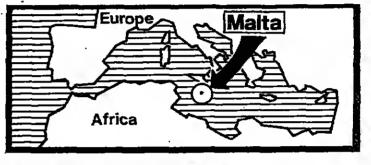

Prime Minister Edward Heath and his government made the decision after receiving what they considered an ultimatum from Premier Dom Mintoff of Malta. It demanded immediate payment of an extra $11 million for the use of base facilities.

The decision follows six months of tortuous negotiations with Mr. Mintoff. Last September it looked as if agreement had been reached on financial terms. The British insist that it was and that Mr. Mintoff has gone back on the deal.

[In Valletta, the capital of Malta, Mr. Mintoff survived a vote of no confidence by a partyline, 28-27 vote, after a noisy debate on the withdrawal issue.

[Earlier, addressing Parliament on the issue, Mr. Mintoff blamed Britain for the collapse of negotiations and said it was Britain that delivered an ultimatum to Malta that it would announce withdrawal if Malta did not accept an annual rental of $24.7 million, United Press International reported.

[Mr. Mintoff said that according to his agreement with Mr. Heath, a final rental accord was to have been reached by Dec. 18, but that "nothing transpired" on his offer of more time to respond to his demand for $46,8 million annual rental.]

The sudden British move to break off the exchanges with Mr. Mintoff seemed to reflect Mr. Heath's blunt style. It was as if he resented what some privately called a Maltese attempt at blackmail.

There was a sharp edge in a Foreign Office statement saying the British "would not seek to keep their forces on the island against the Wishes of the Malta government." There may also hava been an implicit hope that the Maltese would now lower their demands.

Withdrawal could have major strategic implications for East-West balance in the Mediterranean.

Maltese naval facilities are now used extensively by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization the American Sixth Fleet as well as British ships. They could find other berths, notably in Sicily. The possibility that worries NATO strategists is that Soviet ships would use Malta instead. The implied threat of such a deal has been used by Mr. Mintoff as a card in his negotiating efforts.

Just Monday he announced a new trade agreement with the Russians, which was seen here as a possible prelude to naval arrangements.

Soviet naval strength in the Mediterranean is now based at the eastern end. Malta is 60 miles south of Sicily.

Some modern strategists no longer accept the view that naval bases are of great significance. Asked today whether Russian use of Malta would worry him, ona British source replied: "Yes, but not $11 million worth."

A break between Britain and Malta would also end a historic link of exceptional length and significance to both countries. World War II Stand Britain took the island from Napoleon in 1800 and has had a naval base there since 1814. And during World War II Malta was a vital British base, and German planes bombed the island inten-sively. The Maliese stood up so bravely that King George awarded the George Cross to tha entire population in 1942.

Britzin gave the island independence in 1964, and it is now a republic and a member of the United Nations. The difficulties began jast June, when Mr. Mintoff's Labor party won an elec-tion by a single parliamentary

Mr. Mintoff demanded renegotiation of a treaty signed at in-dependence in 1964. He ousted some NATO officials. He spoke of closer connections with Russia and with the revolutionary regime in Libya.

The British had been paying £5 million for use of naval and military facilities-the equivalent of $13 million at today's rate. Mr. Mintoff asked for $78 million. (Continued on Page 2, Col. 8)

Swiss Reject U.S. Request to Extradite Leary

Switzerland refused today to grant a U.S. request for the extradition of Timothy Leary, the drug-culture advocate who escaped last year from a California prison where he was serving an indeterminate sentence of three months to 10 years for possession of marijuana At the same time, it rejected

Leary's request for political asyium, which he had submitted on the ground that he was being persecuted by the U.S. authorities because of his opposition to tha Vietnam war.

However, government officials said that Leary had 30 days in which to submit an appeal. In view of the importance of the case, they said, it would go directly to the Swiss cabinet instead of, as is customary, to the department of justice and police or to the Swiss federal court in year-old Leary would be allowed to remain in Swizerland until the case is decided, the officials sald. In any case, he is entitled like any foreign visitor to request a residence permii, they added. Leary and his wife, who are now living in Crans, a ski resort east of Lake Leman, said they were delighted with Switzerland's refusal to return him to the United States. "My wife and I want to stay in Switzerland," he said. He came here June 21 after a stay in Algeria. A residence permit, granied for a maximum of one year, would require approval by both local and federal authorities.

The government announcement jindicated that rejection of the extradition request was final. It said the request suffered from defective procedure and that the submission of additional documentation could not correct it.

The goal is to deal North Vietnam's supply system such a blow that the effects will last through next March-the end of the dry season along the Ho Chi Minh Trail. That, in turn, would set Hanoi's options back until next November when the rains again end and another campaign season

Buying Time

We are buying time and it is a complicated equation," an Air Force officer said. "One week of bombing now could mess Hanoi up for months."

This officer compared the current air campaign in importance to the Cambodian incursion of 1970 and the Laos invasion in February and March of this year.
While the A'r Force officially went along with Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird's characterization of the raids as another "protective reaction" operation, it was obviously far more than

There have been more than 100 protective reaction strikes this year, mainly against antiaircraft sites. There have been six such strikes labeled as "major operations", numbering a few hundred planes and lasting a day or so. The current air offensive far overshadows any of Officers at the headquarters of Gen. Creigh on Abrams insist that the cost has been negligible, dismissing as propaganda the claims of Hanoi radio on the number of jets shot down. The command has refused to make any official statement. As of today, one officer said, one American Phantom jet and its two crewmen had been lost. Some other aircraft sustained battle damage, he conceded, but all made it clear of North Vietnamese air space.

Damage Not Cited The sparse Air Force communiqués—emasculated because of the security lid clamped on Washington—gave no indication of damage caused by the Officers insisted, however, that the strictly military targets were all in 'route packages" covering supply lines in the coastal panhandle of North Vietnam. The populous Red River Delta and Hanoi itself were strictly off Hanoi radio has charged that several civilian sites were hit, notably a bospital at Thanh Hoa. In the past month one American Phantom jet was downed by a MiG-21 and another MiG burst into a flight of high altitude B-52 bombers, fired a missile but failed to hit anything.

Such activity, emphasizing that the Soviet-equipped North Vietmore sophisticated and threatening, gave Air Force planners an argument for protective reaction

This coincided with equally impressive information from photo reconnaissance flights over North Vietnam showing a logjam of supplies building up along routes entering passes over the Annamite range dividing Laos and North Vietnam. Among other things, a fleet of up to 8,000 trucks previously parked around Hanoi and Haiphong was moving south.

It appeared that Hapoi which had gotten off to a slow start in late November with its infiltration plans, was getting ready to speed things up.

American planners had earlier fed into their computers a wealth of information showing Hanoi's losses in the Lam Son 719 and March. This had already disrupted Hanoi's plans for campaigns in Cambodia and the southern part of South Vietnam.

In August and September, Hanor's plans were further upset by a flood in the entire Red River Delta, which lasted six weeks, It was admittedly the worst flood in more than a century and, although Hanoi radio Dut a brave face on the situation at the time, it was evident that the government's resources were stretched perilously thin

In the eyes of many American planners, these and other weakesses had already limited Hanol's options this season. Any major military action in the southern part of South Vietnam was almost ruled out. The Communist potential in Cambodia was judged serious but not likely to be fatal to the Phnom Penh

The statisticians also noted, however, that improved Air Force techniques last year supposedly destroyed six of every seven tons of war supplies piped along the Ho Chi Minh Trail. If these results could be only slightly improved, say by raids in the North, Hanoi's potential for trouble would be reduced by a disproportionate amount. @ Los Angeles Times

A Conservative Republican To Fight Nixon in Primaries

By Robert Siner

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29 (IHT). -Rep. John M. Ashbrook, a coriservative Ohio Republican, announced today that he would challenge President Nixon in the Republican primaries, starting with those in New Hampshire and Florida,

In announcing his campaign for the presidency, Rep. Ashbrook accused Mr. Nixon of abandoning his 1968 campaign promises and said he would give conservatives a chance to oppose the "leftward drift" of the President's policies. Rep. Ashbrook asserted that Mr. Nixon was elected in 1968 because be offered a change "and it was to be in the conservative

Crime in U.S. Up 6% in 1st 9 Months of '71

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29 (UPI). —Serious crime rose 6 percent in the United States in the first nine months of 1971, FBI uniform crime statistics showed today. Attorney General John N. Mitchell said it was the smallest increase for the period since 1966.

The 6 percent increase in all forms of serious crime from January to September this year compared with a 10 percent gain during the same period in 1970.

However, violent crimes-a subcategory of serious crimes in FBI statistics-in the first nine months of this year increased 10 percent—the same rate as last

Mr. Mitchell also pointed out that crime in Washington-tbe only area where the federal gov-ernment has jurisdiction—fell by almost 14 percent.

Nationwide, armed robbery, which comprised about twothirds of all robbery offenses, increased 17 percent, according to the FBI. Assaults with fire-arms, which account for about one- fourth of all serious assaults, were up 11 percent. The FBI preliminary figures showed the nation's six largest citles-Chicago, Detroit, Houston, Los Angeles, New York and Philadelphia—had an overall crime-rate increase of 14 percent. Murders in the six cities were up 17 percent, rapes up 8 percent and robbery up 15 percent.

More N.Y. Murders

In New York City, for example, there were 1,067 murders during the nine months, compared with 815 the previous year, while rapes increased from 1,622 to 1,767 and robberies from 24,018 to 25,368. Murders and robberies declined. and rapes increased in Chicago and Houston, but there were fewer murders in Los Angeles and Philadelphia, where rape and robbery increased. Cities of 500,000 to a million persons showed a reduction of 3 percent in overall crimes, while chies of 250,000 to 500,000 were up 3 percent. Suburban areas had an 11 percent crime increase, and rural areas were up 8 per-cent. But the highest rate of increase came in small towns of 10,000 or under, which were np 14 percent over a year ago.

In criticizing the Nixon domestic program, Rep. Ashbrook noted that during the 1968 campaign Mr. Nixon warned against a controlled economy, opposed a guaranteed annual income and promised to make the federal bureaucracy accountable.

"It is my firm belief that the Nixon program of 1968 genuinely reflected majority sentiment in the Republican party and through-out the nation," he said. If Americans had wanted the kind of program that Mr. Nixon produced, Mr. Ashbrook declared, they "would have stuck to the party with real expertise in these areas, the Democratic party."

Some Support Expected

He said that he hoped to enter all the primaries and that he did not expect any endorsements from Senate Republicans. He foresaw "handful" of House members and fellow conservatives support-ing his candidacy. Rep. Ashbrook said that there had been no effort by the White House to dissuade him from running, although Sen, Barry M. Goldwater, R., Ariz., tried to talk him out of the primary challenge, he said.

Ex-Justice Harlan Dies at 72, 3 Months After Quitting Court

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29 (UPI). Marsball Harlan, 71, who stepped down from the Supreme Court 14 weeks ago because of illness, died today of cancer.

A spokesman at George Washington University Hospital announced his death. Justice Harlan's successor on the court will be William Rehnquist jr. after his swearing in next week along with Lewis Powell, who was nomineted and confirmed to replace the late Hugo Black Justice Harlan, whose grandfather also served on the Supreme Court, had a long and consistent reputation as a dissenter who disagreed sharply with his colleagues over the "activist" role they essumed during the days of the Warren court in the 1960s.

Named to the court by President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1955. Justice Harlan took his seat before the "activist" group had gained ascendancy. The late Justice Felix Frankfurter, an apostle of "judicial restraint," was still

Local Concerns

Justices Harlan and Frankfurter both felt the court made a serious mistake in a 1962 Tennessee decision opening federal courts to voter complaints about the apportionment of seats in state legislatures Justice Harlan found no basis in the Constitution for such complaints, which he said are "of basically local concern." He later referred to the decision as "an experiment in venturesome constitutionalism."

By the time the court got around to the "one man, one vote" ruling for both houses of state legislatures on June 15, 1964, Justice Frankfurter had been forced by illness to retire. Justice Harlan dissented alone. The turning point in the court's constitutional outlook came when Justice Arthur J. Goldberg succeeded Justice Frankfurter and Justice Byron R. White succeeded Justice Charles E. Whittaker

It soon became apparent that the Frankfurter mantle had fallen on Justice Harlan, who dissented 45 times from the majority during the 1962-63 term. The following term, when the "one man, one vote" ruling was made, he dissented 42 times.

Dissent on Sit-Ins

One of his strongest dissents came when the court wrote off most pending sit-in convictions by virtue of passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. He said a federal doctrine was wrongly being transferred to state jurisdiction. He was by no means always a dissenter. He would be as liberal as the next man when he thought the Constitution demanded it. For example, he spoke for the majority when the court, in its first case involving a four-letter vulgarism in current vogue, ruled that the expression should not be made a criminal offense. The opinion demonstrated the wry humor which characterized some of Justice Harian's comments from the bench during arguments.

By Elsie Carper

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29 (WP). -Six tous of heroin and heroin ingredients were seized this year as part of an international program to control traffic in narcotics, a State Department official reported yesterday.

Nelson Gross, department coor-dinator for international narcotics matters, also said at a press conference that the United States is receiving increasing cooperation from two East European countries, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria, in belping to stop the flow of drugs from Turkey through Europe. The press briefing was held with the release of a year-end report from Secretary of State William P. Rogers, entitled 'In-ternational Narcotics Control Summary." It detailed the Nixon administration's efforts "to diminish and eventually to surpress the illicit drug production and trafficking."

Referring to "this horrendous problem," Mr. Rogers said that effective control is "one of the major objectives of our diplomacy in contacts with other countries." He is chairman of President Nixon's cabinet committee for international narcotics control, established last Septem-ber.

He said he could not estimate the size of the worldwide heroin market but that the seizures. made in Laos, Hong Kong and in Europe, put a sizable dent in supplies intended for the United States and cut back the quality of drngs being sold illicitly.

Prices have remained about the same in this country, at about $5 a dose, but the heroin content has dropped from 10 percent to percent and even less, Mr. Gross said.

Mr. Gross said the seizures were made by the police of cooperating countries with the help of U.S. agents in pinpointing the

Seizure in Laos

Last month the government of Laos seized 730 gallons of acetlc anhydride, sufficient to make three tons of beroin. This chemical is essential to the making of heroin from morphine, an opium derivative. During the year, Hong Kong police seized 12,200 pounds of oplum convertible to more than half a ton of heroin and morphine base convertible to an other half ton of heroin.

Also during 1971, about two tons of heroin or its ingredients were seized in European cities or in U.S. ports on entry from Europe.

States is working out a plan with Yugoslavia to intercept drugs enroute from Turkey to France. The major route from Turkey is through Bulgaria or Greece to Yugoslavia and then across Europe to Marselles.

He sald there are "indications" that Bulgaria also wants to cooperate, and that there was a recent seizure there of about 150 pounds of morphine base.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 29 (NYT).-Monkeys raised in isolation from other monkeys during a critical phase in their youth grow up unable to control their tendencies for violent behavior, a team of animal behavior researchers reported today. They suggested there may be a similar phase in human development. The studies, presented before the American Association for the Advancement of Science's annual meeting here, were conducted by Dr. Allyn C. Deets of the University of Pittsburgh and Dr. Harry Harlow of the University of Wis-experiments done years ago in which Dr. Harlow found that newborn rhesus monkeys raised without warm and close mothering during infancy developed into adults that were unable to relate socially to other monkeys.

Now he and Dr. Deets have found that after the first phase, during which the capacity for affection is developed, there are two other phases. During the second phase, monkeys develop the capacity to cope with fear. During the third, they learn bow to control aggression. Isolation during any one of these phases cripples the development in that area.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 29 (Reuters).—The growth of the women's liberation movement is a result of the development-for the first time-of a society that no longer puts a premium on having babies, according to Margaret Mead.

The renowned cultural anthropologist, speaking to a press conference at a convention bere of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, sald that in societies in which the next generation was the predominant interest, women were restricted to the home to have and nurse bables.

"In every society that we know -with no exception-what males do is called civilization," she said. Women have bables."

When the greatest technological achievement of a society was a seven-foot cance, no one noticed the role differences, the 70-year-old anthropologist continned. But when there is an Empire State Building, women "get penis envy," she said.

Nixon Signs Bill to Revise U.S. Welfare

Recipients Must Take Jobs or Job Training

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla., Dec. 29 (API.—President Nixon yesterday signed into law a welfare-reform bili requiring able-bodied adult welfare recipients to take jobs or sign up for job training.

The bill, which becomes effective July 1, is aimed primarily at the controversial program of Aid for Families with Dependent Children, particularly the 2.6 million parents in the 17.7-millionperson program.

Under the bill, work registration is required for all adults in the AFDC program except for tha aged, fill or disabled, those in school and mothers of children under age 6. Hailed by conservatives, the bill was severely criticized by welfare officials. It was sent to Mr. Nixon

Many said it would have a mini-mal effect, since not enough jobs are available for those who want to work. The problem, said ona critic, is not finding welfare recipients who will take jobs, it's finding jobs for those who will work.

Key administration welfare-reform strategists, in a series of not-for-attribution comments, said the bill would make a bad welfare system even worse. Some said Mr. Nixon should veto it. Mr. Nixon signed the bill whila in Florida for talks with West German Chancellor Willy Brandt.

Nixon Statement

In signing the measure, Mr. Nixon issued a statement in which he applauded what he saw as reforms in the law but added: The welfare system is yet in need of reform. Further economic incentives must be provided to keep families together, rather than to break them apart; to encourage welfare recipients to take jobs rather than to dis-courage them from working. With its return in January this Congress should then complete tha work of welfare reform."

Mr. Nixon sald the key workincentive feature of the legislation "represents a significant step in the direction of welfare re-form," although, he said, some "technical difficulties" are presented by tha languaga

Ultra-Orthodox vs. Secular Faction

By Peter Grose JERUSALEM, Dec. 29 (NYT). Tensions between ultra-Orthodox and secular Jews in Israel are moving toward a serious political confrontation as a new chief rabbi of Israel is to be elected next month.

At the same time, a power vacuum seems to have opened in the religious leadership, and ultra-Orthodox factions have unlesshed their militants in an apparent bld for power over the religious community.

Physicians, bus drivers and others who do not honor a strict interpretation of the ancient re-Heious law in their daily lives, for example, are being subjected to a campaign of civic harassment that has spread out in recent weeks from Jerusalem's Mea Shearim quarter, home of the most Orthodox elements of

Top police officials admit that they cannot stop the harasament and cannot penetrate the closed society of the Orthodox neighborhoods to identify the activists. Criticized by Dayan

The leaders of the country have railed publicly against religious extremists. Defense Minister Moshe Dayan, the most outspoken champion of secular Jewish rights, calls their behavior "a scandal." The conflict of religious and secular interests was a serious problem in Israel even before the state was formed in 1948. It has reached a critical point again now because of political maneuverings among rival religious factions, and a general mood of self-serving militancy across much of the society where for Israel's relations with the Diaspora—foreign Jewish communities-in which firm observance of the religious law is sometimes seen as more crucial to the Jewish identity than it is in Israel.

Government officials say that encouragement and financial support to the militant groups are coming from abroad, mainly Orthodox communities in New York, Britain and Austria. There seems to be no doubt that these communities are at least as concerned as Orthodox Israelis about maintenance of Jewish religious law in Israel. The essence of the debate has been often stated by Rabbi Shlomo Goren, chief rabbi of Tel Aviv and a leading contender to become the Ashkenazi chief rabbi of Israel in next month's election. There is also a Sephardio

Religious Tension Between Israel Jews Rises Rabbi Goren believes that the restoration of national sovereignty for the Jewish people in 1948 justified new interpretations of ancient religious law-the detailed code that traditional Jews have followed to the last punctuation mark during the 19 centuries of exile, as their only enduring expression of Jewish identity. Rabbi Goren and his supporters argue that now, for the first time since the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70, there are other ways of being an observant Jew.

The ultra-Orthodox hold that, state or no state, the law must he observed, just as it was through the long centuries of dispersion. Rabbi Goren, long the chaplain of the armed forces, has the support of leading figures of the Israeli government to succeed the present chief rabbi, Isser Y. Unterman, now 87 years old.

Believing in the flexibility of the law and its adaptability to modern state conditions, Rabbi Goren won the confidence of Mr. Dayan and other secular leaders, even though he clearly favors a strong rabbinical structure across the society.

In an interview, he said the rabbinate as an institution depends on authority, means and "Unfortunately," said, "it has been deprived of all three. We must see to it that they are restored."

What Israeli observers believe is a "Stop Goren" campaign has started a mong ultra-Orthodox groups.

The national religious leadership seems to suspect that the extreme Orthodox factions are trying to prepare their own candidate to succeed Rabbi Untermen, in place of the more liberal Rabbi Goren.

Alongside the forthcoming chief rabbinate election, another factor in the current religious agitation is an apparent offensive by the uitra-Orthodox Agudat Israel party to build up its following at the expense of the "establishthe National Religious party.

Bloc From East Europe The rabbis and determined faithful of Agudat Israel are an extraordinary force among modern Jews. This is a political movement from Eastern Europe that only reluctantly acknowledged the success of its rivals, the Zionist parties, and accepted participation in the life of the Israeli state. Before 1948, Agudat had been strongly anti-Zionist. Agudat Israel remains an important maverick element in relied by its strong adherents in New York and elsewhere abroad. Agudat has only four representatives in the 120-member Knesset, or national legislature. It has regularly been outmaneuver-ed, even on religious issues, by the more middle-of-the-road National Religious party, an amalgam of the religious Zionist movements that Agudat has fought from the old days in gious politics, especially as back-

From their communities in exile, spokesmen for the thousands who will be affected by the final decision have entered the debate. One of these exiles, a draft resister now living in Toronto, Jack Colboun, discussed the alternative service proposal in a published open letter to Rep.

What Mr. Koch failed to comprehend, Mr. Colhoun wrote, "is that many of us would have been quick, willing and anxious to aceept such a proposal five years ago. Indeed, many of us are exiles today precisely because such an alternative was denied to us in the past.

"We left the States because we did not want to become criminals of the heart and now feel that a government which has the stain of Indochina on its conscience has no business passing judgment on our 'crimes' and meting out punishment, no matter how seemingly tolerant and liberal it may be dressed up."

These young men denounced suggestions of amnesty for draft resisters and not for deserters as class legislation. Draft resisters. they point out, are largely collegeeducated, middle-class young men who discussed the war and made a firm decision to avoid service. Deserters, on the other hand, tend to be less well-educated and less articulate men who are caught up by the draft and who turn against the military only after first-hand experience,

Bishops Have Role

Participating in the developing pro-amnesty movement are a number of members of Congress and organizations such as the National Council of Catholic Bishops; the Presbyterian and Methodist eburches and the Church of Christ; the Committee of Southern Churchmen; the Americans for Democratic Action; the National Student Association: the War Resisters League, and Clergy and Laymen Concerned. Harry Schwarzschild, who will head the American Civil Liberties union amnesty office, is encooraged by the potential for commitment to the issue. "We must overcome the divisions, batred and bitterness built by this war," Mr. Schwarzschild "We must overcome the development for the first time in history of a group of American refugees made up of some of the most promising young men in our

The official reaction to these developments was summed up in the one-word answer President Nixon gave newsmen asking about the possibilities of amnesty on Nov. 12: "No."

Since that time Curtis W. Tarr, the Selective Service director, who earlier had told newsmen some sort of amnesty would have to be considered, now says: "It is the wrong time to talk about it as long as parents have sons in Southeast Asia. I just see a great potential for animosity."

The Defense Department answers inquiries about amnesty with the statement that "there have not been nor are there any proposals under consideration for granting a general amnesty."

There are indications the administration may have had second thoughts since President Nixon's rejection of the idea. The Sabre Foundation, a nonpartisan offshoot of the liberal Republican Ripon Society, is beginning a task force on amnesty to develop basic research information on the present situation, the proposals and the history of the question.

70,000 to 100,000 Men Could Face Penalties for Desertion, Evasion

BOSTON, Dec. 29 (NYT).-Although exect figures on the total number of Americans who are deserters or draft evaders are not available, the generally accepted view is that between 70,000 and 100,000 young men could be prosecuted for

Many of these men—estimates range from 40,000 to 70,-000—are in exile, most of them in Canada. Partial figures compiled by various government sources support the estimated totals. At present there are 35,269 deserters listed as being at large—2,346 are known to be in some foreign country. Many of the others are black deserters who are, in the words of one deserter, "back home where they ought to be," taking advantage of the invisibility offered by black communities.

As for draft evaders, the government in 1971 obtained indictments against 4,539 mm for refusing to be drafted. Draft-evasion figures are deceptive. Many young men

Draft-evasion figures are deceptive. Many young men who evaded the draft were never prosecuted because of administrative problems and overcrowded courts. Thousands of others found legal means in evade.

Liberalized laws on conscientious objection offered an out in tens of thousands. In 1960, a total of 16,278 men were granted such protection; in 1971 the number had climbed to 61,412.

In criminal prosecution of draft violainrs, the punishment could be as much as five years in prison and a $10,000 fine. Deserters face sentences of no to ten years and discharge under conditions other than honorable.

Rocky Road for 3,000 Americans Studying Medicine Abroad

By Richard Severo GUADALAJARA, Mexico, Dec. 29 (NYT).-Claude D'Alberti of Fort Lee, N.J., had a solid B

average when he was gradoated from Queens College in June as a biology major. He had thought about becoming a physician but had not In the back of his mind was the notion that he would like to travel in Europe for a year, painting and sketch-ing. Complicating his situation was a very low draft number. When he finally made up his mind on medicine it was late and, with a draft call hanging over him, he did not want to rejection by highly competitive American schools. He had no trouble gaining admiseion to the Autonomous University of Guadalajara and be is learning that the azygous vein le the "vena acigos mayor" and that Gray's "Anatomy" is no more important than Quiroz's "Anatomia Humana."

Mr. D'Alberti is one of some 3,000 Americans who, according to American Medical Association data, are studying medicine abroad. The biggest centers are Guada'ajara, with an enrollment of 1,220, and Bologna, Italy, with about 600, 80 percent of them from New York. Americans are also studying elsewhere in Italy and in Canada, Britain—the number there is small now, only about 70, because the schools favor students from underdeveloped countries—France, Switzer-and, Belgium and Spain.

Age and Religious Factors The Americans go abroad for diverse reasons, among them these:

· Age-Some decided to begin when they were in their thirties or even forties and were advised by medical schools at home that they were too old. One such is 46-year-old George Newell, president of the North American Students Association in Guadalajara. Geography—The bulk of the students come from New York. New Jersey and California, and many complain that they suffered from having lived in areas with big populations where competition was keen. They reelize thet many medical schools like to have broad national representation in an effort to avert greater concentrations of physicians on the two coasts and in big cities. Uncertain and Sensitive

The Americans are uncertain of their future, sensitive about their present and embittered over what they regard as the Amerstranglehold on the profession.

"Being here makes you feel inferior when you are not." Mr. D'Alberti said. "You know what the attitude in the States is. It is in the back of your mind all the time." Americans dominate the medi-

Ducks Yield A Golden Egg For Hunters

TULE LAKE, Calif., Dec. 29 (UPI) .- Two ducks with golden gizzards were found yesterday in this tiny Siskiyou County community near the Oregon border.

The largest piece of the metal was a quarter-inch in diameter and was valued at about 50 cents.

The U.S. Bombing

The "regular bombing" of North Vietnam stopped in 1958, leaving many Americans with the impression that any bombing since has been slight and intermittent. Behind the shield of this impression, the administration has bombed at discretion without the hindrance of public furore. It has done so, of course, in the name of "protective reaction," a concept which originally covered strikes against anti-aircraft defenses but which has since been expanded to cover strikes against anything. The latest strikes are "in reaction to enemy activity which imperils the diminishing United States forces in South Vietnam."

More than 100 'protective reaction' raids have been flown this year. Sinca May, 1970, there have been eight 'limited duration air strikes" involving, like the latest, hundreds of planes and raiding over one or two days, or more. Ignoring all it has taught us about random quality of mass bombing, the Pentagon insists that only military targets are being hit. Hanoi Radio reports a bombed hospital.

The rationale for the recent strikes. American lives are saved when supplies are hit in North Vietnam before being moved down the Ho Chi Minh Trail—is no longer persuasive, if it ever was. As Mr. Nixon has proven, the way to save American lives is to remove Amaricans from combat-better yet, from Vietnam. It is his withdrawal program and new "rules of engagement" (don't fight on the ground) which have lowered casualty rates, not the bombing.

To support this statement, we offer you Air Force Secretary Seamans. He recently conceded that bombing had reduced the supplies and numbers of Communists reaching South Vietnam and Cambodia only to the level of 1967. And in 1967, despite an. Indochina-wide bombing total of almost a million tons (the 1971 figure is about the same), enough supplies reached Communist forces to cause the United States to escalate the war on a vast scale. In November and December, the dry season, we have bombed the Trail at a rate of 5,000 sortles a month. Yet, as a "military source" told UPI: "The North Vietnamese have between 25,000 and 30,000 miles of roads along the Ho Chi Minh. Trail. We crater a road, they switch traffic to a second road and have the first one repaired in half a day. We can't win."

Defense Secretary Laird, on Monday, Justified the new attacks by saying Hanol had broken "the so-called understanding" by which Washington stopped regular bombing in 1968. Mr. Laird cited five "acts" or "violations" of it. (1) Saigon was shelled on Dec. 19 by two rockets, with no reported casualties. (2) North Vietnam has built an

"infiltration road" through the DMZ. It was built a year ago. (3) "There have been no substantive negotiations as promised" in Paris; whose fault is that? (4) Hanoi has fired on "unarmed reconnaissance planes"; and why not, when we attack radar sites as soon as we pick up their signals? (5) North Vietnam attacked more American planes in December than in any month in three years; this is like saying "the dirty Reds, they're shooting back." In all, Mr. Laird's statement was threadbare and embarrassing, all the more so in contrast with Secretary of State Rogers's declaration less than a week before that Communist offensives in Laos and Cambodia are "a clear indication of the failure of their military activity in South Vietnam." Given this "failure," why do we bomb the way we do?

Is there any reason—other than a big power's mindless muscle flexing-for the United States to continue to drop more tons of destruction a year in Southeast Asia than it dropped in the whole Korean War, and almost half as much as it dropped in the whole of World War II? Many Americans, we believe, are sickened that their government should continue to bomb a country with which we are not formally at war, especially when the strictly military results are, by military analysis, so dublous. There is no reason to think Hanoi is bluffing when it says that further raids will only "increase the numbers and prolong the imprisonment" of American POWs-at least five more planes have been lost in recent days. There is, as well, the jeopardy to the prospects of American diplomacy in Moscow and Peking.

We can understand the requirement, psychological if not military, for some use and threat of air power against North Vietnam as part of a program of phased withdrawal of ground troops from the South. We can understand, too, the difficulty of abruptly subtracting the air power, which we ourselves allowed to become an integral element in the Indochina equation in the minds of both Saigon and Hanoi, But the continuing huge dimensions of American bombingand in particular the massive "limited duration air strikes" against North Vietnam when suddenly targets materialize for every airplane in the theater—are another matter: To call this "protective reaction" is to continue to engage in a familiar and thoroughly discredited shell game. For these raids convey a sense of unrestrained power and a readiness to use it which is quite out of keeping with what the President claims as his objective and with what we believe should now be the guiding American aim: to write "mission accomplished" on the American role in the war.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

The Liberation of U Thant

In a farewell to the United Nations General Assembly the other day, Secretary-General Thant said: "I feel a sense of great relief, bordering on liberation ... on laying down the burden of office."

· For 10 years, this quiet Burmese schoolmaster has served with exceptional diligence and devotion in a most demanding assignment. His commitment to the UN Charter, his perception of the problems of an interdependent world and his eloquence in articulating the cause of international cooperation are beyond dispute. He has been the tireless conscience of a troubled planet through a decade of unprecedented turmoil and change.

It is no fault of his that he leaves the world organization in worse shape than he found it, close to bankruptcy—fiscal, political and moral. For years Mr. Thant has cajoled and exhorted member states to reconcile the differences that have driven the world organization to the brink of impotence. He has warned of the madness of a persisting arms race and of the explosive dangers lying in the deepening economic gap between the rich and poor nations. He has interceded, publicly and privately, on behalf of peaceful settlements in Southeast Asia, South Asia, the Middle East and elsewhere.

But his has been a voice crying in a wilderness of jungle diplomacy. If U Thant has not been an "activist" secretary-general, as is widely alleged, it is not for want of trying. His critics forget that while the secretarygeneral is entrusted with broad responsibilitles, he has virtually no power. His effectiveness depends on the cooperation of member states, particularly the big powers. That cooperation has rarely been forthcoming.

In the poisoned international atmosphere of the sixtles, it is remarkable that the world organization-indeed, the world-survived at all. Mr. Thant kept alive at least the hope of international cooperation for peace and started to lay the foundations for a closer world community based on mutual interests and economic development, the exploration of space and seas and the preservation of the global environment. The wise counsel of this dedicated man of peace will still be needed after his retirement.

Time Weighs on Bhutto

Time presses on for Mr. Bhutto, as indeed it does also on all those others who are parties to what has happened. For Mr. Bhutto, one danger is that the longer the situation remains open and fluid, the more likely is West Pakistan itself to suffer from internal schisms, of which there are already algns. This is presumably the main reason why he retains martial law.

For India, and for Bengalis striving to create a Bangladesh administration without a clear leader, time also presses. Vast amounts of arms still remain in the hands of competing guerrilla groups. That was many months ago. The "D Club," on Prague's former Stalinova Street, across from the city's bullet-pocked radio station, has since been renovated with much-needed air-conditioning. And many new discotheques and student clubs have sprouted, all under the auspices of the Socialist Youth Organization, which has apparently decided to: ride with the tide of Western popular culture rather than

'Pop Socialism'

A new term, "pop socialism," is being used to describe the effects of infiltration of Western mass culture in Communist Eastern Europe. And though the trend is by no means new, it seems to be gaining momentum.

In Polish factories, loudspeakers broadcast rock favorites to men and women on the assembly lines, to make the long routine pass pleasantly.

A Western visitor in the East German industrial city of Elsen-huettenstadt was asked by a friend-a tough local steelworker and Communist party memberto obtain for him the latest Tom Jones release as a special favor.

The full scope of the influx of popular modes into the Communist area is probably underestimated in the West, Art fashlons (there are hot pants galore) and films have been reflecting the influence of Western genres.

In some cases this interaction is complex and subtle, as in the film "Mystery of Organisms." by Yugoslav Communist Dusan Makavejey The theme is antisuppression, the universal one of the 1960s. But the film's interspersal of pop symbols, including a scene of phallic sculpture in New York City, and its examination of the sexual revolution, make it hard to tell whether Makavejev is being influenced by mass culture and ideas or, on an other level, is commenting about

Better known is the impact of beat and rock music, which is immediately evident to any tourist. Poland alone claims to have 400 serious "big beat" combos and perhaps 5,000 more small amateur groups. In Hungary, where the beat explosion has been loudest, there are 4,000 rock ensembles.

For this reason, pop entertainment has become very big business, with some Polish singers, jockeys and entertainers earning at least 500,000 glotys a year (more than $10,000 at the official exchange rate). To the extent that a few countries, such as Hungary and Yugoslavia, import Western equipment and records, it also constitutes a drain

Nevertheless, the Communist regimes have been slowly sur-rendering to the deductive pressures of mass culture, including that imported from the West

What Effects?

Indian's View India claims no greater "spir-Ituslity" than others (Ambassador of Pakistan's letter IHT, Dec. 24), but the fact remains that India had for nine months and at great cost sheltered 10 million former Pakistanis seeking refuge from brutal massa their own army. India had full sympathy for the liberation struggle of the East Bengalis that followed, which she actively joined only when Pakistan openly launched a pre-emptive attack on her cities and zerodromes in the West on the 3rd December. We are not ashamed that the joint action of our forces and those of the Mukti Bahini has resulted in the liberation of 75 million East Bengalis from a regime which till the very end carried on its genocidal acts.

We feel no shame at the spectacle we all saw of ecstatic Bangladesh crowds welcoming our liberation forces. It is not that the people of Pakistan have been defeated. It is tyranny which has lost to liberty.

Bangladesh exists. So do Pakistan and India. All three share the same geographical region. Religion should not be a dividing force—the Indian subcontinent has already paid heavily for it in the past 24 years. All we have to do is to discard

However, it is self-evident that it is the "revolutionary" nature of protest songs, beat and soul music that most disturbs Communist officials anxious to keep youth quiet and avoid nulsance. In what must have been a momentary mental lapse, Romanian cultural official declared that "we found rock music cerns, it is obvious that East European countries, like those in the West, are worried about the corruption of historic cultural traditions through the influx, of Anglo - Saxou thythms, This is as true in the lands of Chopin, Liszt and Dvorak as in France or Clermany.

An East German Communist scientist, Dr. Dieter Ulle, was warned of the "valgarization of cultural heritage" as manifested in the pop version of Beethoven's 1962 for the governorship of Ninth Symphony: He also spoke of cultural "Interference."

He added: "If beat music is associated with drugs and murder, tt is not music. If beat is en-joyed with a Socialist attituda there can be no objection to

Concern about the depationalization of culture generally may explain why Communist cultural watchdogs tend to approve of national pop, much of which is:

In some cases, however, East European lyricists, working in their own language, have produced serious contemporary music which, though popular, is also highly artistic and indigenous. One lyric by Polish song-writer. Agnieska Oslecka is an example of this genre:

Lindsay's Quest for the Presidency

By James Reston

NEW YORK Most of the public comments about John Lindsay's bid for the Presidency Illustrate the tyranny of the political parties and add to the confusion about now to pick a President of the United States in 1972. The main problem, which somehow gets lost in the struggle, is to pick the best man to lead the republic from January of 1973 to Fanuary of 1977. It is not a Judgment on the past but a bet ou the future, not a reward for past services, but a judgment on the coming problems and the coming

This is not an argument for Lindsay as the answer, but only a suggestion about getting the question right, and the comments about Lindsay's candidacy clearly indicate that the national debate is centering on the past and on the parties, and not on the future. The old geezers in the Democratic party are killing him. They welcome converts from the Republican ranks, but they regard Lindsay as a cheeky upstart, a little like a Presbyterian who joins the Church of Rome and wants to be Pope four months later. And obviously, they have a powerful

Laughing Stock

They have another point, which is that if he couldn't soive all the problems of New_York City, bow sould he possibly solve all the problems of the nation. So the taxi drivers are laughing at him, and the New York newspapers are blaming him both for abandoning the city and doing nothing about its problems even when he is here. But if seniority and success in previous jobs are to be the tests, how are we to decide? Probably Lindsay will never surmount the charges that he is a new boy in the Democratic party, and that he didn't transform New York into a sale, clean and triumphant city. But there is nothing in our recent history to prove that seniority and success in previous jobs were the answer to the problem of picking a President. . Lyndon Johnson had seniority and was enormously successful as a political leader in the Senateobably the most effective party leader on Capitol Hill of this century but he resigned the Presidency in sorrow.

Jack Kennedy had no seniority in the Democratic party and his record as senator from Massachusetts was no better than John Lindsay's record as mayor of New York; and probably not nearly as good. But he was attractive, in-telligent and curning and he defied his party and put his case to the people, and won. ". Richard Nixon is even a better example of personal conviction and determination. He not only lost to Kennedy for the Presidency in 1960 but to Pat Brown in California and was not only rejected by his party as a hasbeen, but even rejected by himself. And still, ha came back to the White House, and by extraordinary efforts of personal perseverance, is now an odds-on favorite to win again in 1972. So there is a mystery in all this, which seniority, past records and party preferences cannot quité explain. After all, Nixon and Kennedy did not get to the White House because they were great senators, or because they had seniority, or the overwhelming popularity of the party workers. In the end, they put the question to the people over the head of the parties, and this is what

Muskie, McGovern, Jackson, Mc-Carthy and all the rest. So why not leave it to the people? American politics are all mixed up now. With Nixon going to Peking and Moscow and cootrolling prices and wages, and Hubert Humphrey and Ed Muskin arguing for decentralization and more local control, where are the only Lindsay, but Humphrey, party principles? If party loyalty and service are to be the tests, then obviously, Hubert Humphrey, Ed Muskie or maybe even Mike Mansfield or Wilbur Mills, should be the Democratic presidential nominee But if not, Lindsey is entitled to his chance and might even surprise the pros if he gets it, personality, conviction and TV being as powerful as they are.

After all, the Presidency is too important to be left entirely to the professional politicians and the play of the seniority system. All Lindsay is asking, like Muskie, McGovern, Jackson and all the other long-shot candidates, is to get a chance, and this is fair enough. In fact, it may even be better. than leaving the question to the Democratic part, for obviously the party elders don't know how

"Yerma" is a sell-out success here. Miss Espert, who works with the Recherches group put together by Pcter Brook—a kind of international seminar of theater-will take the production to the Aldwych in London this spring. Later in the spring or early in the fall there are plans to take it to New York.

But it almost never appeared at all, and for political not artistic reasons. Eight days before a scheduled preview opening in Barcelona, it was forbidden by the police. Miss Espert and her husband, Armando Moreno, who helps manage the company, hired a theater in Tarragona, on the coast. A second police prohibition arrived.

The Barcelona press, to whom Miss Espert, a Catalan, is a national beroine, got hold of the story and put it in headlines. There was no official explanation for the ban, but privately the reasons were made clear. Miss Espert had been the etar in a violently anti-Franco film, "Viva la Muertc," released in Paris last year by Fernando Arrabal. Miss Espert does not discuss her political views for publication—they are clearly such that no Spanish paper could print them if she did. She did argue in a newspaper interview, however, that as an actress she could not help the politics of those who made the films in which she Nevertheless, a fcw days before "Yerma" was to open in Madrid a third police prohibition arrived. This time the protest was general. Everybody connected with the theater began calling friends in the government. At one point there was a threat that all Madrid's theaters would shut down in an actors' strike.

By virtue of the pressure, and the support of cultural officials in the Information and Foreign Ministries, the ban was revoked and "Yerma" opened, three days

'71 in Retrospect: Safe, Elegant

By Hebe Dorsey PARIS, Dec. 29 (IET),—1971 will so down as the year of the midl flazco and the end of fashlon diktats.

The midi, bowever, had significance and long-lasting effects.
Its failure, due langely to the resistance of the American market, reaffirmed a woman's right to fashion freedom. It has taken a while for women to understand this new way of playing the fashion game. But during 1971, a great many realized they were independent.

Although the midi lost, it had some impact on the fashion scene. The after-effects are still with us. Long coats, especially long fur coats, are very much in and so are long, flowing summer dresses The midi also brought back tha ailing, long evening dress.

The bemline battle, and its disastroue financial aftermath, made both consumers and manufacturers nervous about brusqua changes. As a reaction, they both reverted to safe, classic clothes and conservative, Chanel hemlines. The return to more sedate styles also cleared the air of all the fashion folklore that, for a while, turned women, at least as far as looks were concerned, into so many hippies.

When bohemia gave way to black tie in 1971, fashion seemed to freeze and come to a halt. The year opened with nostalgia for the '40s-with curls, sweetheart necklines, strident makeup and platform shoes. But as the months went by, it became increasingly clear that only the very young were buying the whole package. Older women, no doubt afraid of looking like caricatures, left the '40s pretty much alone.

Pants suits became women's hest friends and the safest pass-port to chic. They changed, though, and became more masculine with Fred Astaire pants, vests, shirts and ties.

Although fashion traveled on a plateau. 1871 was not altogether a dull year. Shorts, or hot pants, struck a cheerful note in the middle of winter. They were worn everywhere, including at the Elysée Palace—but there, they were quickly banned by protocol. England, which gave the world the mini skirt, also came through with the pup look, which was started as a joke by Mr. Freedom, in an effort to "get London off its serious kick." Pretty soon, the market was flooded with batman jumpsuits. T-shirts and a melange of comic-strip clothes.

From the United States came the army uniform as well as leans, last summer's cheap, chic and sexy best seller. Toward the end of the year, kitsch, or high camp, took over with rhinestone jewelry, satin blazers, Technicolor makeup and bare-back vamp

For the first time in years, hats were back, if only at special functions such as the races and more

Ceylon Is Planning Hotel Under the Sea

COLOMBO, Ceylon, Dec. 29 (AP).—A project for an undersea hotel was given preliminary ap-proval by Ceylon's tourism minister, Punchi Banda Kalugalla, today.

The project, which is still in the formative stages, is proposed jointly by the Ceylon government end a West German investor, Johannes Reubuch.

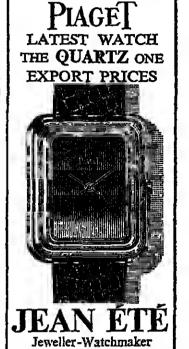

Mr. Reubuch said the costs would be shared equally by the partners. The glass-walled hotel would provide viewing of marine life for 60 clients. There would also be closed-circuit television viewing of life below the surface.

Commercially speaking, 1971 was a great year for ready-to-wear and the Florence and Paris salons were attended heavily hy the international press and buy-ers. The 22d International Salon dn Prêt-à-Porter, at the Porte da Versailles in Paris, drew a record attendance of 65,000 buyers, more than 50 percent foreigners.

علدًا من الأمل

The American fashion magazine world was strongly affected by the resignation of two prominent editors. At Vogue and Harper's Bazaar, Diana Vreeland and Nancy White were replaced by Grace Mirabella and Jim Brady.

Last but not least, in 1971, Chanel, also known as the great Mademciselle, died, after playing an enormous role in the fashion world for 50 years.

And it is surprising that so resourceful a librettist as Gilbert should not have done more with a story which served Donizetti well enough for "L'Elisir d'Amore" and Wagner even better for

"Tristan and Isolde." It's the old device of the love potion, with Donizetti's Dr. Dulcamara reappearing as John Wellington Wells,

"dealer in magic and spells," the sorcerer of the title.

It was the third in the long succession of Gilbert and Sullivan

Haughey, who urged the government "to create a sympathetic environment here in which the arts can flourish." Irish writers, such as Sean O'Faolain, immediately predicted a "marvelous renaissance" in the arts.

Whether a renaissance has come about remains doubtful Some artists in London, who have made tentative inquiries about moving to Ireland, have decided against it because of fears that their contacts with friends and even their creative impulse would somehow diminish because of the isolation. Others are worried about living in a country deeply influenced by religion.

Some writers, dependent on British television and the Lon-don stage for their livelihood, bave found even more gnawing problems. "I've got plays on the BBC but can't go back to watch rehearsals because the first year that you set up residence here you can't return to your former country of residence," said Mr. Owen, a screenwriter who formerly lived in England and Wales. You spend hours on the phone talking to the director,"

Sitting in his living room in a home near downtown Dublin, the trim, mustachioed writer said: "The tax advantage is great. There's no doubt about that. In England, during good years for me, they sometimes took as much as 60 percent of my carnings. It was just too bloody much." This was echoed by Mr. Mankowitz, a 47-year-old London-

born author who has written more than 30 films and about a dozen books, "For the first time I don't have to think about how much money I have to make to pay Inland Revenue," said Mr. Mankowitz, wearing a Moroccau caftan at noon in his modern apartment, "In England I'd have to earn £12,000 or £13,000 [about $30,000 to $32,500] a year to get five or six thousand pounds back. It reached a point where I couldn't afford to write for myself and I had to write purely commercial things just to pay taxes. Now I have the leisure to do what I want." There is little sense of community or kinship among the artists living tax-free in Ireland. Several authors gather in such Dublin pubs as McDaid's or The Plough but most of them avoid literary cliques. "Generally, writers don't make very good companions," said Mr.

Mr. Ertl said statistics proved that the Common Market was more liberal on trade issues than many other nations, the United States being no exception. "From 1957 to 1970, the export of American farm products to the Com-mon Market rose from $588 million to $1.5 billion per year," he

"On the other hand, we should not ignore the fact that export of Common Market farm products, especially milk products, are significantly hindered by American protectionist measures," he added.

Meanwhile statistics were pub-lished here which will hardly help West Germany plead mounting economic difficulties in the forthcoming negotiations. They showed a favorable halance of exports over imports of some 16 bil-lion marks ($5 billion) for 1971,

The figure is about what it was for the previous year, despite increased export difficulties brought about by the floating of the mark last spring end the U.S. special import tax.

Volvo, Saab Deny They Are Ending Assembly Lines

Kaj Sandell, a Sash director, said, however, that Saab has begun experiments with "self-ruling" groups of employees in the motor assembly department of its Soedertaelje fectory, with the aim of achieving "better working conditions for the workers." At the same time, he said, he can see no way to eliminate the assembly line concept.

He said the self-ruling groups are still working in an assembly line system, though they do have e degree of individual right of decision within the group on production they are involved in. A Volvo spokesman said Volvo does not plan to climinate a mufficr-exhaust assembly line at one of its plants, as The New York Times reported. He said Volvo definitely has no plans to more away from the assembly line system.

One possible suggestion, contained in the report, would be authority for the President to negotiate zero tariffs, et leazt on industrial goods, in return for a similar concession by others, particularly the Common Market. The report sets out three main elements in a better world monetary system: "A presumption that exchange rates will change when needed rather than a presumption that they will remain fixed and inflexible for long periods; a need to equalize the incentive to adjust for surplus and deficit countries; and the need to determine a rational, certain procedure and means for creation and regulation of international liquidity that reduces the world's present dependence on U.S. (balance of

Pay Board Seen Weak, Split, Hamstrung

By Philip Shabecoff

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29 (NYT), -The Pay Board, by the testimony of a representative cross section of its members, has been ineptly led, acrimoniously divided and largely ineffectual in the first months of the second phase of President Nixon's economic stabilization program.

Recent talks with public, business and labor members of the board, who spoke freely but asked not to be identified by name, indicate that its early operations have teen severely disrupted by poor organization end partisan side and business and public members on the other. The board has ruled on only two contract settlements, has allowed a huge backlog of cases to accumulate, has spent endless hours in debate without reaching conclusions, has temporized on policy decisions, sown confusion and raised questions about the legality of its procedures, these members say. One member, who was optimistic when the board was first formed, now gives it no more than a "fighting chance" of holding wages to noninflationary levels next year. .

Only Two Rulings

Disenchanted members, including nonlabor and labor representatives, point out that the board has ruled on only two major wage settlements since Phase 2 began on Nov. 14.

These rulings, on the wages of coal miners and railway signal-men, gave settlements substantielly higher then the board's own guideline limiting wage increases to an annual average of 5.5 per-

The miners' contract provides for e 15 percent raise in the first year. The rail signalmen's contract calls for a 46 percent raise over 42 months, but raises due next April 1 and thereafter are still subject to review.

Most discussions of what has gone wrong with the Pey Board start with the quality of leader-ship provided by George Boldt, tho 68-year-old judge from Scattle.

One business member described the judge as "a hard-working, straightforward man who has earned the respect of every member of the board. He is a saint amount of abuse without com-

But another and perhaps more representative view among board members was expressed by a nonlabor representative who declared that "to throw en elderly, lnexperlenced judge into this bear pit was just not sensible. He has guts all right but he just doesn't understand what is hitting him." When asked about the charges of weak leadership on the Pay Board, Judge Boldt has steadfastly insisted that he bas in fact asserted bis authority over the board and has won the respect and confidence of all its members. the failures of the board on its tripartite labor-husiness-public structure, a format demanded by labor as a price for its coopera-tion, "All the flibustering and partisan debate has undermined the efficiency and effectiveness of the board," eald one member.

One labor member insisted that it is the unwillingness of nonlebor members of the board to make policy by consensus that is rendering its operations ineffectual. But there is general agreement with the feeling of one nonlabor member who said that "we still have not gotten into this thing. We still haven't got the proce-

Residential Record in U.S.

Rise Is Reported to Be 53 Percent in Year

By Thomas W. Ennis NEW YORK, Dec. 29 (NYT).-

Residential building contracts, breaking all records in November, gave a big increase to the total value of all construction contracts awarded in the month, the F. W. Dodge division of McGraw-Hill Information Systems Co. reported yesterday.

Contracts awarded for all kinds of construction work throughout the country in November, according to Dodge totaled $6.4 billion, an increase of 24 percent over $5.17 billion in November, 1970. The record-breaking residential contracts totaled $3 billion, a rise of 53 percent over $1.96 bil-lion in November last year.

The cumulative value of all building contracts for the first 11 months of this year, as estimated by Dodge, rose 17 percent to $73.49 billion from $62.99 hillion last year. Recovery Resumed

In releasing the figures, George A. Christie, Dodge's vice-president and chief economist said: "November's recovery from the previous month's brief contracting dip shows that the flow of newly started construction has resumed the strong neward trend that began with last year's change in credit conditions."

But Mr. Christie noted that "it's been one-sided growth," with almost all of the 1971 expansion concentrated in housing, which gained 40 percent over the last 11 months Housing will hold steady in 1972, Mr. Christie said, while most types of nonresidential construction will respond to an expected improvement in economic condi-

Natural Gas Fuel For Cars to Be Sold in California

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 29 (AP-DJ:-Smog Abatement Systems Inc. end Dual Fuel Systems Inc., sald today they have signed an agreement to open public centers in California for converting cars to operate on natural gas as well as gazoline.

Smcg Abatement Systems is authorized by the agreement to market and install Dual Fuel Systems' conversion kits, the companies said. The first natural gas conversion center will be opened early next year. It will be able to process a minimum of 2,000 cers annually, taking about four hours to install the conversion equipment in each car.

It will cost an estimated $400 to $500 to convert a car to the oual system, Smog Abatement said. However, fleet operators of five or more cars are expected to he offered a discount. The company said its initial customers will be drawn primarily from large companies and public agen-cies whose fleets account for about 10 percent of Los Angeles

Because it is lead-free and burns more efficiently than gasoline, natural gas can reduce air pollution and car maintenance,

The decline in short-term inleres; rates remained a prop to a stock market that ignored such potential negatives as U.S. bombing raids on North Vietnam and, on the domestic front, the minimal gain in the leading economic indicators during November. Numerous cross-currents also affected the market, which has only two trading days remaining for 1971. There was some tax-loss selling, offset by what brok-ers called "bargain hunting" among depressed stocks. Mutual funds, meanwhile, were adjusting their portfolios preparatory closing out the final quarter of the year. The Dow industrials now are situated approximately midway between the 880-900 area describcd by some technical analysts as a "resistance zone," hecause var-lous amounts of stock have been appearing for sale here. In time, can rise above this hand of resistance. Thanks to the drop in interest rates, utility stocks turned in their third consecutive gain after two months of essentially sidewise

Lower interest rates mean lower borrowing costs for utilities, as well as reduced competitive pressure from the bond market as an alternate investment vehicle. Bond prices have climbed this week, with a corol-lary decline in their yields.

On the American Stock Exchange, the index closed at 25.42, up .07. Advancing issues outnumbered declines by 571 to 389, with 283 unchanged. Volume increased to 5,769,000 shares from 4,808,000 yesterday.

Most active was Unexcelled at 9 7/8, up 1/2, on volume of 181,300 shares.

The government bond market took a sharp dip as dealers began to question wbether their earlier interpretations of the Federal Reserve's moves were on target. Coupons lost 1/4 to 1/2 point and Treasury bills were weaker.

In the corporate sector prices backed off a little in the afternoon as trading quieted to close up 1/4 to 3/8 in spots,

To Unitholders of International Income Fund

Your Advisors believe many investors in the International Income Fund would prefer an automatic re-investment program to the semi-annual payment of cash dividends which has applied since the Fund was formed in 1965. Accordingly, income will be accumulated after payment of the semi-annual dividend due in Jenuary 1972.

As of February 29, 1972 each of the present Units will be subdivided into fifty new Units. Thus, Unitholders who still desire to receive cash periodically, can do so by selling the conveniently denominated new Units in the secondary market meintained by White, Weld & Co. Limited, or by redamption, on presentation to

Nassau: Trust Corporation of Bahamas. New York: Bankers Trust Company London: Bankers Trust Company White, Wald & Co. Limited

These changes will be described in the Annual Report for 1971, which will be available from us and from White, Weld & Co. Limited.

Unitholders of the International Income Fund need take no ection as each of the old Units represented by the certificates they now hold will remain valid indefinitely and become equal to fifty new Units. Nevertheless, if they wish, Unitholders may present their certificates for exchange into the new smaller Units to the issuing agents White, Weld & Co. Limited, in London. Although such sub-division does not become effective until February 29, 1972 serificates issued from the date hereof will be issued on the basis of fifty new Units for each Unit presently outstanding.

No other features of the Fund will be changed. It will continue to provide a professionally men-aged international medium for fixed income

By Alan Truscott

An opening trump lead, with the object of limiting dummy's ruffing power, is often the best if the dummy seems likely to have exactly three trumps. West could have beaten the contract if he had followed this theory on the diagramed deal.

After South's one-heart open-ing hid North had to choose between a one no-trump response and a slight overbid of two clubs, for the partnership had agreed never to raise with three trumps. He chose the weaker bid, but jumped to three bearts over two diamonds on the next round. This bid would normally show about 10 high-card points, but

CYRANO DE BERCERAC

By Edmond Rostand. Translated and adapted for the modern stage by Anthony Burgess, Afred A. Knopf. 174 pp. $5.95.

Reviewed by Alex Szogyi

IT is an old theater adage that valid theater. Perhaps untrue, plays are not written but but the theater does need new rather rewritten. It is also a blood. This least intellectual of nice truism that plays are not translated so much as adapted. Even the most literal transliteration into another tongue still bet ays the genius of the new language touched by the tem-perament of the adapter. While the original may never date, translations have a way of tarnishing quickly. Each generation deserves a new interpretation of a work.

And so it is fitting that we be given our "Cyrano." Bergerac " Edmond Cyrano." "Cyrano de Edmond Rostand's hoary Valentine ever since its first production in 1897 has been one of the better myths, more salubrious certainly for Americans than the life of Willy Loman. Vaguely anschronistic in its own time, the five-set tragicomedic-heroic melodrama is the last flowering of 'a genre that Victor Hugo was tinkering with back in the 1830s in such plays as "Ruy Blas" Though Rostand was no Hugo, his gallant verbal virtuality is brilliantly appro-priate to the myth he forged. Through the mystery of such a creation, the quixotic Cyrane, with a nature nobler than his nose, has stepped forth into a form of immortality which transcends the work and the

Whenever there is a great actor to do the part the play lives on. Rostand had Coquelin, Brian Hooker (in the most celebrated of previous versions, 1923) had Walter Hampden, and earlier this year, Anthony Burgess fortunately had Paul Hecht at the Guthrie Theater in Min-neapolis. The original inspiration, the great libertine Cyrano of the 17th century, was easily more fascinating than the play written about him but hardly less intriguing than his latest adapter, the ubiquitous Anthony Burgess, one of our universal genres Deeds its intellectuals especially in the realm of translation, for backs rarely translate with brio. Eclectic epicurean that he is, Burgess was undoubtedly attracted by the image of "Cyrano." His own profession de foi is amusingly Cyreno-esque in fiavor: "...primarily I call my-self a serious povelist who is attempting to extend the range of subject matter available to fiction, as also a practitioner who is anxious to exploit Words as much as a poet does . . I believe the wrong God is temporarily running the world and that the true God has gone under ... Thus I am a pessimist but believe that the world has much solace to offer. As food, music, the immense variety of race and language, literature, the pleasure of artistic creation."

All this is not far from the Cyrano panache, that vital je ne sais quoi that sums up Cy-rano's particular form of libheroism and romantic ertine refusal to coexist with humiliation. So taken is he with the notion of panache that Burgess justes on keeping the original term in French, strewing it liberally here and there in the text where Rostand never dreamed of using it. Burgess's ambitious preface spends time justifying all this and more as he posits panache at the fore-front of the play's symbolic meaning.

As for the translation itself, it is both virile and ingratiating. It is also quite noticeably prolix and unfaithful to the letter while attempting to garner the spirit of the original. It is not the work of a subtle poet: Its alliterations are aggressive and grating and its penchant for repeating words three times is naive. It is somewhat Wilburinspired: but just as Rostand was no Molière, so Burgess is right now no Wilbur. ("Their pope, who's as fat as suct/Says Tove one another, so they have

Yet it is also consciously witty, urbane and ("Odor of sanctity, Hm. Is that/A new Parisian perfune?") eminently actable.

NEW YORK, Dec. 29 (NYT). Bruce Taylor, the San Francisco all-pro cornerback, has a badly sprained ankle and is a doubtful performer for the 49ers against the Cowboys in the National Conference championship game at Dallas on Sunday.

His probable absence weights the outcome even more in favor of the Cowboys, who have generated considerable momentum while winning eight straight games. For a replacement at right corner-back, coach Dick Nolan has Michael Harry (Mike) Simpson, a skinny but eager resident of Groves, Texas, who has played hardly at all.

MIAMI, Dec. 29 (NYT),-When coach Paul (Bear) Bryant phoned John Aitchell jr. per-son to person and invited him to visit the University of Alabama as a feotball prospect earlier this year, Mitchell was flattered but not awed.

"I didn't want to come to Alabama at first," the person-able 6-loot-3-inch, 230 pound Mitchell said earlier this week recalling the series of events that led to his historic position as Bama's first black football regular. "I felt 1 might have a few prohlems." A defensive end of Eastern Arizona Junior College, Mitchell had settled on Southern Call-fornia as his school. The school had a history of courting black ethletes and treating them kind-ly, and Mitchell was impressed with coach John McKay. Bryant learned of Mitchell only through a casual conversa-tion with McKay, who talked of signing "this good defensive end prospect from Mobile, Ala." "My mom and dad were leaning toward Alabama," Mit-ehell said. With Ali in U.K. LONDON, Dec. 29 (UPI).-British heavyweight Danny McAlinden is two fights away from a May 27 date with Muhammad Ali, boxing promoter Jack Solomons said today.

McAlinden, 24, must first take the British title from glass-jawed Jack Bedell and then beat an opponent still to be chosen before can share the ring with Ali, Solomons said. Solomons yesterday reached a tentative agreement with Rebert Muhammad, Ali's manager. The fight will be held outdoors, at the Villa Park soccer stadium in Birmingham. Solomons said: "If McAlinden does not como succesafully through his two earlier fights, then, of course, the match with Ali will not take place because he vill have no right to be in the ring with the former world champion. "However, I believe McAlinden will prove he is Britain's best heavyweight."

Earl Jellicoe, chairman of the trusiees, made the disclosure yesterday after accepting a check for £40,000 from U.S. Ambassador

Walter H. Annenberg. "To say Chequers is coming apart at the seams would be an exaggeration," said Mr. Jellicoe, leader of the House of Lords.

"It is not delapidated.

But there are a number of rooms not of the quality, both in decoration and in general condition, one would expect of a prime minister's residence," he

Chequers, a 40-room Elizabethan-style mansion in rolling Buckinghamshire northwest of London, was presented to the nation as a rural retreat for prime ministers in 1917 by Viscount Lee of Fareham. Mr. Annenberg, a millionaire newspaper publisher who became ambassador to Britain in 1969, doneted the money out of B personal education and charity fund set up in 1951 He asked that the gift, commemorating two visits to Chequers by President Nixon, be used to finance "an identifiable and lasting improvement at the estate. Mr. Jellioce agreed more than a little such improvement was needed.

"The house has not had the money spent on it over the last 50 years which it should have had," he said. "A tremendous amount needs to be done." He said the treasury had been spending £17.000 a year on upkeep since 1953. A further donation of £250,030 had been invested provide future income for maintenance. The board of trustees announced later resterday that part of Mr. Annenberg's donation will be used to buy a signed portrait by Sir Thomas Lawrence and the rest "for improving the house and grounds."

Mr. Annenberg spent a reported £400,000 in 1969 improving his official residence overlooking London's Regent Park.

During the time he presented his letters of credence to Queen Elizabeth, the monarch inquired where the ambassador was living. "In the embassy, of course, subject to some discomfiture as a result of a need for elements of refurbishing," he replied.

Pablo Casals: Each day I am reborn. Each day I must begin again.'

By Margot Preece

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, Dec. 29 (Reuters).-Still pursuing his one-man crusada for peace, still writing music, the man generally recognised as the world's greatest living cellist, Pablo Casals, celebrated his 95th birthday today.

Fiery as ever, Mr. Casals has lost none of his love for humanity nor any of his hate for war and killing. He once wrote: "I am a man first, an artist second." As if to prove the dictum still stood for him, Pablo Casals declared during a birthday interview: "Savages... We are all savages. The savages are less savage than we are."

He had just been looking Bt B newspaper which displayed a photograph of Bengali separatist guerrillas torturing victims during a flush of victory in their newly proclaimed state of Bangladesh.

"To obtain peace at the rate we are going will take another 300 years. But we must start to work now," he added And then the Spanish-born maestro. who went into self-imposed exile after Generalissimo Francisco Franco won the Spanish Civil War in 1939, began to outline his "theory of peace."

"You have to start with children when they can understand the meaning of the word. You have to teach the child at about the age of 9. the miracle, the marvel he himself is. ... That he has these things (pointing to his own sparkling blue eyes) ... to see ... to hear ... to think. All this is B mirBele."

If the child realizes this, it teaches him responsibility and "if each individual feels this way Bbout peace, then society will be ready to work for B peaceful world the maestro said.

Looking out from the parch of his suburban home, nestling in a hillside over looking San Juan, he decried the fact that nations institutionalized and celabrated killing. "We still cannot have the horizon of B better world. Teachers and parents teach only materialistic things to children.

Mr. Casals, born Pau Carlos Salvador Defillo de Casals in the Catalan village of Vendrell on Dec. 28, 1876, has long been in the forefront of causes. In 1936, when civil war wracked his country, he put his world-famous talent toward raising money to feed Catalan children and for the Republican cause against the forces of Gen. Franco...

When Gen. Franco triumphed, Mr. Casals went to France, living there under World War II German occupation. He settled in Puerto Rico, his mother's hirthplace, in

He first learned the piano, the violin, the organ and to compose from his father. He heard a cello for the first time when he was 11 and decided this was to be his life's instrument. He, then studied 'in Spain and in France, encouraged by the faith of his mother that he would one day be a fine musician.

He made his Paris debut as a soioist in 1899 and before long he was in demand all over Europe and the United States where in 1904 he played for President Theodore Roosevelt. About B half-century later, in 1981, he returned to the White House to play for another American leader the late President John F. Kennedy.

PARIS, Dec. 29 (Reuters). France pays a hefty price for having the world's highest alcohol consumption. Officially, drink kills more than 30,000 Frenchmen B year, but according to a leading campaigner against alcoholism the figure is probably closer to 100,000.

A vigorous publicity campaign by the government and private organizations has only managed to contain alcoholism, which after heart diseases and cancer is the biggest killer in France. According to official figures, the average consul bead of population in France in a year is 115 liters (more than 25 gallons; of wine and 40.7 liters (nine gallons) of beer.

This puts the average Frenchman's consumption of pure alcohol Bt 28 liters (six gallons) & Lear.
